THE BREEZE OF SPRING

HI winter hastens to be gone,
He's fliappearing fast;
the sunny hodrs are coming on,
The stermy time is neat.
the tee no longer bind the sill.
Nor spuws their e anthe fling;
or avery bleak and barren hill
Has kissed the breeze of Spring.

And they their offerings bring: The flowers their awastest income yield, To seem the broase of Spring.

The black-bird, from the bawthorn bush, Renews bis lively strains:
On topmost branches alands the bush, And then also threat smaller.
At close of evening calm and mild, He makes the force; ring with maller speed notes clear and wild—He loves the breeze of Spring.

The yobin leaves his winter friends For hedge-rows far away— Above his mossy mest be bends, And pipeshis plaintive lay. The lark, uprising with the light,

And halls the breeze of Spring A hundred voices fill the air.
The sun shines warmly down;
Away with each littrading care,
and leave the gloomy town.
Come, roum along the wood-path green,
Hear Nature's Tavorites sing, Enjoy the soud-enlivening scene, And woo the breeze of Spring
